FUNERAL ARRANGEMENTS

Mrs. Emma Dorothy Eliza Nevitte Southworth, the celebrated novelist, who for some time past had been gradually sinking, died last evening at 8:30 o'clock at her residence, corner of 36th street and Prospect avenue. Her death had been expected at each succeeding hour during the day, her terday morning. She fought the battle long, her wonderful vitality keeping her up, but after battling for many hours the thread of life was severed so peacefully and quietly that those surrounding the bedside were hardly aware of it.

Death was caused by no special disease for many years, much longer than is ordinarily allotted to human beings. Old age crept on and slowly but surely clogged the delicate mechanism, continuing its work until it gained a victory in death, but its progress was so quiet as to be painless.

Her Fatal Illness.

Being in failing health for several years past, Mrs. Southworth was able to be about, but was not able to do her accuswarm weather this season. The heat had a disastrous effect upon her, and caused her to take to her bed, from which she never arose. Several days ago it was seen her iife could not be saved, and that death was only a question of a short time. She became totally unconscious yesterday afternoon, and a few minutes after 3 o'clock the mark of death appeared. Yet the spark of life continued to glow feebly. Faintly and slowly the respiration came, so faintly that it could hardly be discerned. Totally oblivious to everything, she calmly slept on, and at 8:30 o'clock she breathed her last. All the members of the family, who had been constantly in attendance at her bed-side during her illness, were present at the last moment.

Family Almost Prostrated.

terrible strain that had been upon them, were nearly prostrated. The son, Dr. Southworth, who had constantly attended his mother during her illness, had been without sleep for nearly the entire week, and during that time had tasted scarcely a Morsel of food.

A telegram was sent yesterday to Yonkers, N. Y., for James Valentine Lawrence, jr., a nephew of Mrs. Southworth, who arrived about 5 o'clock in the afternoon. He will remain in the city until after the obsequies. The exact time of the funeral was not definitely announced this morning. It is the desire of the family to have it as early Monday morning as possible, probably 9 o'clock.

While for some years past Mrs. Southworth, on account of her health, had not been able to attend church, she was inclined to the Swendenborgian belief, and the funeral exercises will be conducted by Rev. Dr. Frank Sewall, pastor of the New Church. The services will be held in the chapel in Oak Hill cemetery, at which place the interment will be made.

The pallbearers will be personal friends of the dead woman, some her schoolmates and others in whom she took a great pride during life. The selection was made in

The picturesque cottage at 36th and Prospect avenue had been the property of Mrs. Southworth for over half a century, but she had not occupied it continuously. In 1875 or '76 she left here and visited Yonkers,

N. Y., where she lived for several years, returning May 1, 1890. Since then she had done but little literary work, owing to her

There are quite a number of citizens who have pleasant recollections of her efforts to start them in the rudiments of education. Capt. Robley D. Evans, it is believed, was among her pupils, as he was also subsequently of Mr. J. E. Thompson.

Her literary inclinations exhibited them. Her literary inclinations exhibited them-

Her literary inclinations exhibited themselves about the time she began teaching, and at this early date she began to write for the public. Her first efforts appeared in a paper called the Baltimore Visitor. Its editor was Dr. Snodgrass, whose anti-slavery sentiments rendered him extremely unpopular with the people of Baltimore, and he was finally obliged to sell out to Dr. Bailey, the proprietor of the National Era, of this city, the paper in which first ap-peared "Uncle Tom's Cabin." *

The First Serial Story. This change took place after Mrs. Southworth had begun the story entitled "Retribution," which was the first serial ever published in this country. As the authoress stated during her life, she had no intention of starting a serial. It was her Intention to complete the sketch in one number, but she found this to be impossible. She wrote a second, then a third and a fourth, and by that time she found that she could not finish it in ten numbers. Thus was a lengthy story evolved from a small beginning. The publication occurred small beginning. The publication occurred in 1847, and two years later the story was published by Harper Brothers. This story established her reputation as a writer.

No Recompense at First. Strange as it may seem, this story was written without any compensation for the authoress. She did not ask for anything, and no recompense was offered by the publisher. After its appearance and for two years longer she continued to teach school years longer she continued to teach school during the day and at night would follow her literary inclinations. Her stories were eagerly read, and her reputation as a writer continued to increase. The continued steady work of teaching school and writing at night proved to be a hard task in the course of a few years, and it was then that she refused to furnish further contributions unless she received pay. Her services to the paper were too valuable to be dispensed with.

While her labors continued on the Era she accepted an offer made by Henry Petersen, then publisher of the Philadelphia Saturday Evening Post. Mr. Petersen foresaw that her stories would constitute a saw that her stories would constitute a great element of popularity of the Post, and the result showed his shrewdness. The subscribers at the time of her engagement to over 30,000 before she left, an increase largely attributable to her pen. It was about this time that she gave up her positive. tion as public school teacher and confined her attention exclusively to writing.

Engaged by Robert Bonner.

When Robert Bonner came into possession of the New York Ledger and turned it into a family paper he offered Mrs. Southworth double the pay she was receiving from other papers, providing that her writings should belong exclusively to the Ledger. This represented $10 a column, and as she furnished four columns a week it made her an income of $40 per week, quite a com-fortable sum at that time. By a later arrangement Mr. Bonner became some proprietor of her serials which were not afterward issued in book form. When he transferred the paper to his sons, a few years ago, and retired from its man agement and control Mrs. Southworth with-drew and was no longer connected with it in any way.

Mrs. Southworth may be ranked as one of the most successful novelists this country has ever produced. Perhaps she might be said to belong to a generation past rather than to the present, which anects either founded entirely on fact or partly so. In life it was her delight to tell how a novel was evolved from a small beginning, and the "Hidden Hand," one of her books, was frequently spoken of by her. This book was written in the winter of 1857, when the health of the authoress was very bad, a sister was dying of consumption and all her surroundings were depressing to the last degree. With all of these circum-stances the brightest and gayest of her stories, as she herself acknowledged, came to her. To use her own words, the facts of the evolution of the story are as follows: "I happened to see in a New York paper a short paragraph in which it was stated that a little nine-year-old girl, dressed in boy's clothing, and selling newspapers, had been arrested. She was homeless and friendless and was sent to some asylum in Westchester county. That was the origin of Capitola. The newspaper item was the seed which dropped in my mind and ger-minated there. When the time came for me to write of it I had to make an origin for Capitola. I remembered an incident that had, in the days of my childhood, oc-curred just across the Benning bridge. An old monthly nurse had been met one night by two masked men, who blindfolded her and took her up to a house. Still blindfold-ed, she was conducted to a room, where a few hours later a child was born to a young woman. The nurse refused to make away with the child, although bribes were offered her. The young mother was also obstinate for the preservation of her infant. Finally the mother, being discarded by her family, brought up her child, who was well known in Washington and did well. That was the reality upon which the birth of Capitola was founded.

"Nearly every adventure of Capitola came from real life. Her bright rejoinders to Old Hurricane were taken from many scenes between my sister and her old uncle in Mississippi. Her adventure with Black Donald was taken from a somewhat similar adventure in which figured a woman of Marvland and a colored ruffian, who, in 1812, was the terror of the neighborhood. Her duel and its cause was also founded upon fact. A young girl, brought up among her brothers-wild and hoydenish-was liv-ing in Mississippi. She had been misunder-stood and offended by a British officer. Her male relatives treated the matter lightly and laughed at her, whereupon she challenged the officer to a duel. She met th officer accidentally, as I related in the story, and when she was armed. A repetition of her challenge was met with contempt, and then she fired at the officer—not with dried peas, as my little heroine did, but with bul-lets. He was severely wounded and she gave herself up to the authorities. The magistrate, however, upon hearing of all the circumstances, discharged her. I do not approve or defend such conduct as she was guilty of, so I softened and modified it in my little heroine. Capitola's encoun-ter in the woods and the ruse by which she escaped was also taken from the adventures cident from which it was taken was related at uncle's dinner by Gen. G. P. —. these separate incidents, from infancy these separate incidents, from infancy to maturity of my heroine, were like beads—I strung them together. The character of Old Hurricane might be seen in one out of every ten of the old planters of Maryland or Virginia. Liberal, kindly at heart, but overbearing and blustering in manner. Despite the depressing circumstances under which I labored when I began that der which I labored when I began that story I took pleasure in writing it. When I left the sick bed of my sister, where I had been all day, I frequently sat down at Then care and sorrow would leave me; the bright spirit of Capitola pos-sessed me, and I felt bright and happy my-

In her own estimation, while the "Hidden Hand" was regarded with much favor, Mrs. Southworth thought more of "Ishmael," a story that is partly true. The character Ishmael was a portrait of a well-known man who became famous, and who was at first woefully poor and forsaken. The description was so well drawn that the indi-vidual was recognized, and though the authoress never told whom she had in mind, many people wrote to her in regard to the person.

Up to a few years ago, when Mrs. Southworth ceased her incessant labors, she had the distinction of having produced as many the had lived. She then novels as the years she had lived. She then had a total of seventy-three novels, forty-four of which were published in book form, and the remainder as serials in the Ledger. At the present time there are two unpublished manuscripts of hers at Prospect Cot-tage. One was completed a few years ago, and is named "An Incarnate Fiend." The and is named "An Incarnate Fiend." The other was more recently completed, the authorses being able to work but a short time each day on it. The title of the second manuscript is "An Angel Unawares." The first-named is said to be a freer novel than any ever written by Mrs. Southworth. Most of her previous stories were so constructed as to please the tastes of the readers of the Ledger, but "An Incarnate Fiend" is said to be without any embarrassment of style.

AFFAIRS IN GEORGETOWN.

"Old People's" day will be observed to-

of her home, nearly half a century ago, and admired the view, up to the present year, many celebrities in literature, when in the city, paid their respects to the authoress. She was a friend of John G. Whittier, the poet, and it was claimed that she was the one to suggest to him the story of Barbara Freitchie. This claim has been disputed by some, but be it as it may, Mrs. Southworth has among her effects the following letter from the poet, dated 2 "AMESBURY, 9 Mo. 8, 1863.
"My Dear Mrs. Southworth:
"I heartily thank thee for thy very kind letter and its inclosed message." It ought to have fallen into better hands, but I have to have fallen into better hands, but I have just written off a little ballad of 'Barbara Freitchie,' which will appear in the next Atlantic. If it is good for anything, thee deserve all the credit of it. I wish I could accept thy kind invitation to thy pleasant cottage home, but am too much of an invalid to undertake the journey. I thank thee none the less, however, for asking me. I shall go there in imagination, if I cannot otherwise. With best wishes for thy health and happiness. I am most truly thy f'd.

Surviving Members of Her Family. Only two of Mrs. Southworth's children are living, Mrs. James Valentine Lawrence of Yonkers, N. Y., and Dr. Richmond J. Southworth. When Mrs. Southworth was first taken sick, at the beginning of warm weather, her daughter was sent for. She came here and remained until about June 3, when she returned home. Saturday last a telegram was sent her announcing the serious turn of her mother's illness. She came on at once, and had remained in attendance ever since Dr. Richmond J. Southworth, her son, was untiring in his attendance upon his mother, and Mrs. Blanche Porter Southworth, his wife, was as solicitous for the comfort of the distinguished patient.

Of the family of Mrs. Southworth no full brothers or sixters are living Mrs. Event. brothers or sisters are living. Mrs. Francis Baden of this city is a half sister, and formerly occupied the Southworth cottage while the novelist was away. Mr. Henry Henshaw of Frederick, Md., is a half brother. He is a retired engineer in the revenue marine service, and was at the house to see Mrs. Southworth a few days before her death. These, with her children, are the only surviving members of the family.

Mrs. Emma D. E. Nevitte Southworth was in many respects a remarkable woman. She was born January 26, 1819, in a house on New Jersey avenue near K street southname was Emma D. E. Nevitte, the fam-

Looking back over all that she accomplished, and thinking of the great changes in American literature, a recent writer, who was reviewing her life and work, said that, contemplating "this remarkable career—this continuous stream of storicallities, according to the contemplating of the career—this continuous stream of the career of story telling—on entertaining popular fic-tion, running through a period of forty years, one cannot resist the conclusion that her pen has been a potent factor in the education of the popular mind."

The authoress had her own habits, and adhered strictly to them. Ordinarily, she labored five days each week from noon to midnight, scarcely taking time to eat. It was always a real joy to her to look for-ward to the two holidays of the week—Sat-urday and Sunday. For the past six or sev-en years her working periods changed con-siderably, on account of her increasing age. How She Wrote Her Stories. Inspired Barbara Freitchie. the realistic and philosophical type of romantic writing more than any other. Mrs. Southworth's stories, sensational as they have often been called, are prolific in incident, dramatic in composition and vitally alive from beginning to end, but were never impure. Their popularity was won by these characteristics. All of Mrs. Southworth's stories were
